

RESPONSIBILITY

Indigenous Peoples have a special relationship with the land

The land is a place for cultural practices and provides resources

Indigenous Peoples have the legal right under Canadian law to continue their practices, customs and traditions that existed before settlers arrived or, in the case of Métis Peoples, before the area was under the control of the government.

